SOCIAL ETHICS OF SENSATION NOVELS.

The Novel is unquestionably a moral, social and intellectual power in the pres-ent day. The stories of George Eliot Mrs. Lewis) especially are more valua-ble in their teachings and analysis of bie in their teachings and analysis of character than the stereotyped monitions of a thousand pulpits. To Dickens we owe the application of humaneness to the prison, the poorhouse and the manufactory; to Thackeray of the unveiling the enameled face of fashionable society; to Charles Reade the exposure of the conspiracies and horrors that center in the madhouse. But the effect of the modern novel is not wholly beneficent. False views of life are as frequently engendered by them as high resolves and Christian sympathies.

Take, for example, Wilkie Collins last. Not joy in Heaven, but social restoration in this world for a fallen woman, at the outset sinned against, not restoration in this world for a fallen wo-man, at the outset sinned against, not sinning, is its moral climar. Gladly would we see the lost all saved, the so-cially shipwrecked restored. But if this can be done only by annulling the Nemesis of sin, by placing vice and vir-tue on the same level, by making false-hood and fraud the instruments of res-location, we reserve a sit is those. hood and fraud the instruments of res-toration, we prefer society as it is, though harsh and cold in its judgemants, to such a mixed Utopia. Wrong never be-comes right, deceit never leads to self tespect, continuing in sin never makes grace to abound. One pities "The New-Magdalen," and feels that if such a case could really happen, which we think im-possible, it would argue a screw loose somewhere in our social machinery. But true neace comes only from Heaven's But true peace comes only from Heaven's forgivness, and social restoration only from the enlightened action of the Chris from the enightened action of the Chris-tian commonwealth. Charity and pity must be based, not on maudin senti-ment, but on right and truth. All that tends to depreciate the in-trinsic worth of chastity in woman is hartful to society. Nor are the Gov-erament of God and the Government of nan opposed and contradictory in tature, as sensation novelists and demagogues insist. The judgment of society is no more necessarily opposed to that of the All-Merciful, than is our Supreme Court to a District one. If all penitent women are to work back into the social position they have lost by personation of another a funise name and a stoler. character, and if, because the world discovers and ostracizes them, they are to be regarded as victims of its cruelty, or, as Wilkie Collins puts it, "Citizens of the Government of God, outcasts from the Government of Man," then, indeed, our civilization is being reconstructed at its base. Yet that civilization, severe, like the Divine beneficence itself, in its reflex action on transgressors, has stood for centuries unshaken by Atheism, Communism, Mormonism and Free Love. All theories and systems which would destroy the Family, by cheapening purity in woman and domestic fidelity in man, may grow up like a noxious weed, but, having in them no root of social or moral life and progress, they will be cut down inevitably by the sharp sevthe of advancing Christian thought. seythe of advancing Christian thought San Francisco Post.
